The strain on her system is plainly noticeable, and it seems to be a remarkable exertion of will power that keeps her up under the scathing ordeal of cross-examination which is lired at her by Arthur

Precisely at 10 o'clock the case was resumed behind closed doors, according to the request of the defendant's attor-neys. All the afternoon yesterday was taken up with the admission of letters which had been written between the parties. Considerable cross-firing was indulated in by the attorneys, Senator Brown raising repeated objections to the same on the grounds "that they were irrelevant, immuterial and not tending to prove the case, or to substantiate the grounds for damages for which this case had been brought." The objections were promptly overruled. taken up with the admission of letters The objections were promptly overruled and the examination continued as to her companionship with young Hyde. CROSS-EXAMINATION.

More letters were introduced this morning, which received the same ob-jections, and which were also over-ruied by the judge, after which Senator Brown opened the cross-examination. The plaintiff was subjected to a series The plaintiff was subjected to a series of questions on the matter of her relations with young Hyde, and all her answers were given in an intelligent and modest manner. She was asked by counsel for the defense the names of different young men she had walked out with; was asked whether she had ever went out with Oscar Lunt, to which she answered "no;" was also asked if she had gone out or made practice of going out with Ed Sparkes, Julius Pratt, Bert Coonrad, and an actor by the name of Severns, to which she answered in the negative. She was asked also if she remembered a time at her home when a number of young men were present, and that a certain young man, Will Sparkes, and not given her or made her a present of a pair of garters, and which he had put on in the presence of the others. She answered not that the garters were arm garters, and she said they were not put on her limbs, as stated. She was also questioned as to the interview at the Cullen hotel, whether she had at the Cullen hotel, whether she had not herself worked up that interview, which was answered also in the negative, and plaintiff further stated that her aunt. Mrs. W. O. Adams, had brought about that interview on her

There was no material difference between his testimony and that of the plaintiff in regard to the meeting at the Culien hotel.

DEFENDANT TESTIFIES.

J. A. Hyde, ir. was then called in his own behalf and said that he had known the plaintiff nearly all his life; had associated with her as children generally do until 1895, when he began generally do that 1886, when he began calling on her with more intimacy and attended the district school with her and was in the same classes. Jan. 5, 1886, he started for Logan, but remelhed over in Salt Lake. He had previously tried to get the plaintiff to go to the Logan school and entreated her makes to be the reas as the could have to the Logan school and entreated her mother to let her go, as she could tearn more there than at the local schools. When he started, however, he did not know whether Mesa, as he called the plaintiff, would go or not, but telegraphed her from Salt Lake to join him at that place, which she did. At this juncture he was telephoned by his father to come back. He informed the girl of this fact, but did not give her the reasons why his father had sent for him to return. He knew his father was opposed to his going with the plaintiff but he had never informed her of his father's protest. After plaintiff returned from Logan he renewed his visits and while he admitted same affection for the plaintiff, he protested that he had never engaged himself to marry her and that the ring spoken of by the plaintiff was just merely a friendly gift. He admitted the criminal relations with the plaintiff and said they

Acreage About Springville Larger Than Last Year.

Springville, Jan. 6.-Beet contracts now being signed by the farmers here indicate a much larger acreage this year than last. This is due to the fact year than last. This is due to the fact that the acreage is not limited this year, each farmer being allowed to contract for as many acres as he desires. Last year a limit was placed upon the contracts, and only the most successful beet growers got contracts. This caused a great deal of dissatisfaction with the Lehi factory, and to it was no doubt due much of the agitation in favor of a factory here.
